Industry Articles

Common Interest Development industry articles

As with any business, there are many disciplines involved in running a homeowners association, including project management, accounting and finance, construction, horticulture, insurance and law. Various skills are needed—skills in planning, problem-solving, facilitating, organizing, delegating and motivating, diplomacy, human resources, negotiating and many others.

There are many in-depth reference works available for specific aspects of Common Interest Development management and having convenient access to them is important. Therefore, this section is included for those that we reference most often.

Such materials are available from respected organizations such as Community Associations Institute (CAI) in Alexandria, Virginia, <http://www.caionline.org>, and from homeowner association support organizations in our area.
